Philemon: The Bond That Holds Us – Philemon’s Problem

Paul said of Philemon, “hearing of your love and faith which you have toward the Lord Jesus and toward all the saints”. (vs. 5) Philemon’s love and faith for “all” the saints would be tested with Onesimus. Onesimus was a runaway slave that wronged Philemon. He was a fugitive; however, he became a Christian during his time with Paul. Onesimus was now a “beloved brother”. (vs.16) Would Philemon really love “all saints”, regardless of their past and position in life? If Philemon’s problem was with Onesimus wronging him, Paul would repay with his account. What did Philemon do? I want to believe that he listened to Paul and did the right thing by loving Onesimus as a “beloved brother”.

What about you? Do you love the church? Do you really? This means loving any and every brother and sister in Christ, regardless of race, political views, and every other fragmented difference in our world today. I wonder, if we are honest, if our love for the church is for those who believe and look exactly like us. A common love for each other is not because we all look alike and believe in the same things. It is because of the “Bond That Holds Us”. Paul’s letter to Philemon challenges us today.

Do we have a love for all the saints? If not, we have a problem.

In Him,
Josh Barnett
